The Authour to the Reader.

THE proper Use and Design of a Latin Dictionary, suited to English and tender Capacities is (in brief) the Translating of Latin into English first (as being the easiest,) and then the turning of English into Latin (some Grammatical foundation being presupposed) without the help of other Books.

In answer to this Design it should consist of two parts ; One containing all Words (both Appellative and Proper) all Idioms and Phrases used in the Latin Tongue, with apposite English suited thereunto ; The other containing all kind of Words, Terms of Art and Phrases used in the English Tongue, with proper Latin suited to them ; and both in an Alphabetical Order : because that is most suitable to the weakest Capacities, and is not (in the least) prejudicial to the strongest.

Having therefore (as to this general Design) observed what is amiss, superfluous and wanting in others ; That we have here endeavoured to Rectifie, Retrench and Supply.

In the Latin part, many Words and Phrases are much more properly rendered than they were in any other ; and where a single word could conveniently be had, we chose it rather than a long and tedious Periphrasis.

We have not heapt up Synonoma's, but yet took care that Words (especially the primitives) should have the whole variety of their several significations.

Such usefull Explications, Directions and References as were wont to be in Latin, are here in plain and intelligible English. But such Latin Explications as were afterwards repeated again in English, we judged a needless vanity, and therefore have omitted them. We have also omitted tedious Etymologies, which (for the most part) depended meerly upon Conjectures, and were of little or no Use at all to Children, but have given them where they are plain, and rationally to be deduced, how carefully they have been considered, and how well performed, we referre to the judgment of the learned.

The quantities are here made more complete, by being placed upon initial vowels, as well as other syllables.

Many Phrases and Proper Names (with the hardest of their Genitives) are added from Calepine, Ferrarius and others.

The method also of Calepine is here observed in placing all (both Common and Proper) in an Alphabetical order. Which cannot be blamed by any that considers the great conveniency of dispatch in the search of any thing required, the natural dependency of one upon another, the many Repetitions and References that were wont to be made from one to another, and are all by this method saved.

But that method of Calepine and others after him (who wrote for Men) in placing the Derivatives all under their primitives, is not (in the least) to be followed by those who pretend that they condescend to the lowest capacities. For they are sometime so strangely changed, that it puzzles an experienced judgment where to look them.

In the English part, the Corrections are so many and so great, as would take up too much Time and Room to relate.

Thousands of Words, Particles, Idioms, Phrases and Proverbs are added. Together with the whole body of Proper Names, not only of Men and Women, and places here in England (so far as could be procured) but also the Modern names of Foreign Countries, Islands, Mountains, Cities, Rivers, and other noted Places, especially in Europe, as France, Germany, &c.

Some obsolete Words and uncouth Phrases are among the rest, because we are to suppose the very worst that any one can have occasion to turn into Latin, without intending the English for use. For as in the Latin part only the English, so in the English part only the Latin is to be propos'd for imitation. And the want of this consideration gave occasion to many mistakes in other Works of this nature.

The English irregular Plurals of Nouns, and Preter-tenses of Verbs are here (to our utmost) observed. Together with such English Substantives, as are also taken and used as Adjectives, than which there is hardly any thing more common, yet nothing less regarded, or more needful to be understood.

And all in a regular and Alphabetical

THis Book hath sufficiently commended it self to the VWorld by the Sale of almost 4000 in less than two years time.

There is lately Published by the same Author Mr. Elisha Coles, and sold by Peter Parker at the Leg and Star in Cornhill,

An English Dictionary: Explaining the difficult Terms that are used in Divinity, Husbandry, Physick, Philosophy, Law, Navigation, Mathematicks, and other Arts and Sciences. Containing many thousands of hard VWords (and proper names of Places) more than are in any other English Dictionary or Expofitor. Together with the Etymological Derivation of them from their proper Fountains, whether Hebrew, Greek, Latin, French, or any other Language. In a Method more comprehensive, than any that is extant.

Intended for the help of such as understand not the Latin, and other learned Languages, that they may arrive at a competent Knowledge to read and write English with the greater Judgment and Certainty.

Dr.

Dr. W's. Opinion of Mr. Coles Dictionary.

Mr. Parker.

I commend your Diligence and Discretion in promoting and Printing so useful a Book, as the English and Latin Dictionary (Published by Mr. Elisha Coles) a Work which I have long wish't for, as very much conducing to the Public Good.

For all the Dictionaries yet extant (tho most of them compos'd with great skill and Learning, and of good Use to Learned men) either by reason of their great Bulk, or (if in small Volumes) of their great Defect, are no way comparable to this Dictionary you have now Printed for the use of Children, who are set to School to learn the Latin Tongue.

For the English Dictionaries (wherein the English goes before the Latin) all before this extant, are not only very deficient, very many Words being wanting in them, and scarce any of those Forms of Speech peculiar to our Tongue, & which are to be render'd in Phrases proper to the Latin, being to be found in them (wherein yet the greatest Difficulty lies, and consequently whereof there is the greatest Necessity in Books of this kind) but besides this, they are usually stufft up which a tumultuous Heap of Latin Words, some proper, others Metaphorical, others but nominal, being indeed Greek in Latin letters, and many obsolete or incongruous, being much more proper and agreeable to other English Words than those to which they are subjoyn'd. Hence the Making of Latin, which in Schools is the chief and most necessary exercise for Beginners, becomes a Task intolerable. And when it is made by the Help of those Dictionaries, it has (as needs it must) the most strange Face and Sound imaginable, that to him that understands the true Propriety of the Latin Tongue, it appears altogether barbarous, absurd, and ridiculous. Hereupon the School-master is angry, and the poor Scholar is severely beaten, who knows nothing of the Badness of his Latin, till he findes his Faults corrected in Letters of blood. But now all this while the Fault is not in the Children, but in the Book, which while they make it their Refuge, proves the great Impediment of their Learning. And this I think will plainly appear by this comparison.

A man places his Son with a Printer, that of him he may learn the Art of Printing. Now it is not necessary that he which sets the Letters for the Press, should understand the Language which is to be Printed. 'Tis then the Employment of this Lad, by the Appointment of his Master, to set the Letters for the

This Example is according to a Custom used in Holland.

Press, for the Printing a sheet of Paper in the Latin Tongue. He is brought to the Boxes of Letters, which are ready furnisht and prepar'd to his Hand, he is taught the Order of Letters, and the Art of Composing. He proceeds according to this Order, and errs not in the Use of this Art. But when a Proof is drawn off from the Press, when a sheet of Paper is printed with the Letters by him set, it hath the strangest Aspect imaginable. For in some Words there are two or three Latin letters, then a Greek letter or two, then one or two Italic letters, and in each Word still some old English or Dutch-letters intermixt, and oft-times empty spaces in the midst of Words, having no Letters at all. The Master of the Press at the beholding of this, is strangely incens'd; seeing it is well known he hath had time enough to learn the right order and art of composing, the Lad escapes not without stripes, now how much is he to be pittied, in case upon Examination of the matter, he be found to be in no fault at all. And so indeed the Case stands. For the only cause of all the miscarriage is this: The Person to whom the chief place in the Printing-house is assign'd, in the Distribution of the Letters, constantly fills all the Boxes with a strange confus'd Huddle of letters, putting in the same Box some Roman, some Italic Letters, some Greek letters, some old old English Letters, and in some Boxes assign'd for some of the Letters, none at all. And he that is a Learner, and not well able to distinguish these letters, and is only taught to take such Letters out of such boxes, though he exactly observe his prescription, must needs make such miserable work as has been before represented. And while the Boxes remain furnish't with such a strange Mixture of Letters, 'tis impossible he should make better Work. And where he is furnish't with no letters at all of that kind, he must of Necessity either make vacant spaces, or fill up with heterogeneous letters, which will render the Print utterly unintelligible. And till the Boxes of Letters are better order'd, 'tis impossible these Errors should ever be redrest.

I could heartily wish that the Errors of making Latin in the School, were not too parallel to this of setting letters for the Press. But it is too manifest that the English Dictionaries hitherto extant are like those Loculi of heterogeneous letters. And while children are yet learning the Latin Tongue, it's utterly impossible they should discern that propriety of Words, which necessarily supposes an exact knowledge of it. Hence in their making of Latin there is that wild Mixture of Words, proper, improper, metaphorical, exotick and obsolete: and oft for want of a Word in the Dictionary, they are forc'd to coin one from the English, or leave a vacancy in the Latin, which breaking the sentence destroys the sense. Thus a company of disagreeing words, rudely chain'd together (like Captives of divers Nations) by the Rules of Concord and Regiment, make up a strange piece of barbarous Nonsense. And Children train'd up in these Exercises never arrive at the skill of making good Latin, till they are furnish't with so many proper words and Phrases in the Latin Authors they have learn'd, as will serve for this Purpose. And thus the Dictionaries design'd for their Help, prove rather hurtful and impedimental to them, till they have made such an Advance in Learning, as that they have little or no further Use or Need of them.

By this means it comes to pass, that the progress of hopeful youths in Learning, is extremely retarded. They are kept it may be seven years at School before they can learn the Latin Tongue, when I doubt not but it may be made manifest by demonstrative proofs and undeniable experience, that by an ordinary Diligence, in the use of proper and fit Means, a lad of ordinary Capacity, in the space of one Year, may be advanc'd to as great or greater Perfection in the Knowledge of the Latin Tongue. And for the more speedy Attainment of Learning, the former age hath not furnish't us with so proper a Help as this present Book.

For in this little Dictionary Children may readily find a proper Latin word for any English one, and the right Interpretation in English of any word that occurs in the Latin Tongue. Here likewise the Anglicisms or Propriety of our English Tongue, which are of greatest Difficulty, and give the greatest trouble to Beginners, have their Import express'd in proper Latin Phrases: and the chief Phrases and Idioms of the Latin Tongue, are truly interpreted in English, with a brief Explication of such proper Names as do occur in Poets and Historians. Here is a Furniture sufficient for the carrying of the Learned by the Conduct of a discreet Teacher, through the Latin Tongue. Upon this Account I cannot but congratulate the youth of this Age, in that they are or may be, at a low price, furnish't with a little Book of great Use, by the Help whereof they may, in a pleasant and Compendious Way, arrive at that Learning by which they may attain to Riches and Honour, and which being accompany'd with true Piety, will prepare them for the Highest Happiness.

To conclude, that this little Dictionary is above all extant, adapted to the Use of Schools, and Benefit of Scholars, that desire to attain the Latin Tongue is the Opinion of Sept. 10. 1677. Your loving Friend.
